Woman Suffrage in Washington.

PORTLAND, Oregon, January 16.—A special from Olympia, Washington territory, says: A bill granting suffrage to women passed the lower house of the legislature to-day. It passed the upper house last week by a vote of nine to three. Petitions are pouring in on Governor Semple from all parts of the territory, asking him to veto the bill. Opponents of women suffrage think he will return the bill without his approval while friends of the measure think they can pass it over his veto.

The Rio Grande Pacific.

DENVER, January 16.—At a meeting of directors of the Rio Grande Pacific, a road soon to be built from Glenwood Springs to Salt Lake, in this city to-day, D. H. Moffat was elected president, W. S. Cheesman, vice president, T. W. Gilluly, secretary and treasurer.

H. W. STEELE,
[illegible] of the GAZETTE.

The Colorado City News comes out in a manly way in favor of suppressing places of vice in its city and says that it is expressing the sentiments of the majority of the people. We hope this sentiment will now find full expression in the administration of the law.

We have at different times drawn attention to the danger threatening the business of this country through the various trust companies. Several of them have been in existence long enough to show clearly their tendency which is to raise prices and give a far more than fair return for the investments of capital. The question involved is not like those which have been raised frequently by too zealous labor reformers in their fanatical crusade against capital. We have always believed that capital should have a fair return, and that we should take into account in estimating what this return should be the risks which the capital took in its investment. As for example, if the original investors in the Rio Grande road had held on to that property and were now receiving ten to fifteen per cent income on their investment, we should think it nothing [illegible] than a fair return, but [illegible] of the risks there were in the investment when it was made in this [illegible] and practically unproductive country. The trust companies rest on an entirely different [illegible] of the [illegible] as the [illegible] "[illegible]" in the produce and stock exchanges. These [illegible] people have gradually gone to work [illegible] the co-operation of all parties [illegible] so that they [illegible] the products, the [illegible] have been [illegible]. They have [illegible] prices, but have put them up to the highest [illegible]. For example, a western [illegible] manufacturer says that the [illegible] trust has already advanced the price of [illegible] from four and a half cents per pound to ten and a half cents a pound, or an advance of 125 per cent. No part of this increase goes to the producer of the iron ore or to the [illegible] who makes the steel. The price of nails has [illegible]. This plow manufacturer says that while there was free competition among steel [illegible], prices were [illegible] uniform, so that they could adjust prices and make contracts [illegible], but now this is impossible. A few large companies will probably receive a rebate on this price, and then gradually the various products made from [illegible] will go into the hands of other trust companies which are in league with the parent steel companies. This is an attack on legitimate business. The main argument for protection is that it [illegible] our [illegible] competing with the pauper labor of Europe. This is a good reason for having protection, but it is not a good [illegible] for [illegible] protection that while it may give to our laboring people more wages than are received by the pauper labor of Europe, it also [illegible] a few capitalists to receive two and three prices from these laboring people for their products. It is a good time for congress now that this question is being agitated to take some action to prevent these trust companies from using our protective tariff to rob the people. In the paper business this trust company has given a good illustration. The envelope manufacturers had been for years making envelopes at a price that must have paid them something as the prices continued for several years. A trust company was founded on the 1st of July and envelopes were at once put up twenty to forty per cent. This must have given the manufacturers more than a legitimate profit for they could not have been doing business at a loss before. But they saw that they could get the price up still higher, and so put another advance in September of from five to twelve per cent. We are now informed that still another advance will be made within a few days. This is only an example of what the other trust companies are doing. Below is a list of some of the articles protected by our protective tariff which are now practically managed by trust companies.

Trusts	Duty, per cent	Trusts	Duty, per cent

If congress would fix the tariff so as to protect American labor and give capital a fair return and abolish all tariff above this point, it would make impossible these vast monopolies that are likely, unless soon curbed, to create the greatest war between labor and capital the world has ever seen.

Italy's War Contribution.

BERLIN, January 16.—Several Italian staff officers are here consulting with the German military authorities. It is reported that their mission is in connection with Italy's undertaking to send 170,000 troops to fight in the event of war.

Postoffice Deficiencies.

WASHINGTON, January 16.—The secretary of the treasury has transmitted to congress an estimate of $170,572 to cover deficiencies in appropriations for the postal service for the present fiscal year. The principal item is $51,471, for transportation of foreign mails.

AT THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Scenes in the French Legislature Described by a Deputy.

(Copyrighted, 1888, by the European Correspondence Co.)

PARIS, January 1, 1888.

What a crowd! Between the Pont de la Concorde and the Palais Bourbon they are pressing, huddling, vociferating, asking each other questions, and above all laughing, whilst the policemen move about hither and thither in their effort to keep order in these clusters of humanity, which, if they had their will, would bar the way of the deputies [illegible] to [illegible]. [illegible] are pointed out and noticed as they arrive. But here they are, all having come with an eagerness and a punctuality to which they are by no means accustomed. The fact is that there is to be a grand demonstration at the Palais Bourbon—a "[illegible]" [illegible] of the ministry—perhaps a toppling it over.

Still, the crowd remains there. The hours slip away, and it remains. It would be so good to be able to tell one's friends and acquaintances in the [illegible], that one had been actually in front of those walls behind which something perhaps was going on.

Don't let us imitate these gapers. Let us go in.

Here we are in the Salle des Pas Perdus, which is not always a hall of lost footsteps, where this or that one of the abounding applicants succeeds in gaining the decorative ribbon, or the license for a tobacco shop. In this hall, deputies, senators, office holders, journalists and seekers of every kidney, come and go. There is a tremendous hubbub, in the midst of cigar and cigarette smoke.

Just on one side is the Salle d'Attente, where are crowded together the persons who have sent in, written on a scrap of paper, a request for an audience of this or that deputy. When the deputy appears an usher calls out the name and th[illegible] who have asked for him pounce upon him. Sometimes it is a pretty wo[illegible] who wishes to be present at the sitting, and the gallant deputy makes interest with the chief officer, who, when there are no more places vacant, still contrives to find one more. Sometimes it is an elector, who, having come to Paris from the back slums of his village, desires to see his representative, and above all to be seen at his side. The good deputy makes the best of it, takes courageously the elector's arm and walks with him once or twice up and down the Salle des Pas Perdus. The [illegible] provincial, who believes that his deputy is as grand a personage in Paris as in his own village, [illegible] an air of import[illegible] [illegible] imagines that everybody is looking at [illegible]—and, on returning [illegible] will [illegible] among his family traditions this happy day of his life. But, for the most part, the elector is [illegible] of an intriguer than of a braggart. Craving some appointment he is all the more urgent in seeking support inasmuch as he is conscious that he lacks qualifications. To get rid of this bore, the deputy scribbles the solicited recommendation, and takes himself off. Let us take ourselves off with him, and penetrate into the Salle des Seances, which is as handsome to look at as it is disagreeable to occupy—[illegible] [illegible]ed, badly ventilated, and with execrable acoustic properties, [illegible] the [illegible] of deputies with weak lungs and of orators with feeble voices.

Perched on his chair of state, Monsieur Floquet presides. He has an eye wide awake and a well-shaped mouth and carries his head as though it were [illegible] thing [illegible]. He is a president of the highly decorative order. His skill is great in lecturing as politely as possible, now the right, now the left, and in throwing in occasionally an appropriate little speech that pleases every one. Before him is his bell, that he sounds often in order to call for silence on the part of the interrupters, whose [illegible] are [illegible] on the part of the [illegible] speaking much more loudly than the orator. At his sides are the young deputies honored by the title of secretaries, and specially useful in noting down the votes. Below him is the tribune.

Now to this tribune, still warm with the burning eloquence of Gambetta, mediocrities very often ascend, making speeches got up long beforehand, to which nobody listens, but which the Journal Officiel will put in print, thereby enhancing their value to the electoral college.

When an orator who is wearisome mounts the tribune, you may see the deputies get up and walk out quietly one after another. Among the small number of resigned ones who remain some gossip in groups, others write to their correspondents, and some among them, leveling their opera glasses, search in the tribunes for a pretty face where on the eye may pleasantly rest.

But where are they who have gone out? Several of them repair to the Salle des Conferences, adorned by a colossal statue of Henry IV., and amuse themselves by reading the newspapers that are spread out upon a large table. There are some—but they may be counted on the fingers—who betake themselves to the library, rich with [illegible] volumes and where may be especially found among all the [illegible] of Jean Jacques Rousseau, an authentic copy of the official proceedings [illegible] Are set down [illegible] the judges.

Not much [illegible] not staying long in the Salle [illegible] [illegible] of the deputies [illegible] to the bar, where [illegible] will [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] sandwiches, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] or toss off [illegible] instantaneous process of photography [illegible] now in vogue one could take some of the groups thus formed and the result [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] each other's shoulder, cordially conversing or laughing heartily together the same deputies who in the tribune and in the newspapers are [illegible] and unceasing in the interchange of abuse. Do not conclude, therefore, that there are only comedians playing a part. They are Frenchmen. They are alike chiefly in their anger and in their amiability, and courteously fraternize, while decided antagonists.

Does a colleague come in bringing word that one of the leaders of the chamber has just mounted the tribune? Is it a [illegible] for instance, of Jules Ferry, or M. de Mun? [illegible] all the [illegible] [illegible] from the [illegible] in bodily and hasten to their seats, these to listen conscientiously, those to interrupt. For you must be told that there are deputies whose [illegible] vocation is to be [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the origin of which is lost in the night of [illegible] times. Some [illegible] themselves to stentorian yells, and [illegible] out [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] with vehement gestures an opportunity for speaking of which they take good care never to avail themselves [illegible] some improvised [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] gotten up at leisure. There is even [illegible] one of [illegible] who by [illegible] [illegible] in obstructing the speaker and by their furious persistence have brought upon themselves not merely a call to order—an infliction common enough—not merely the censure—a penalty less often meted out—but the shutting up in a [illegible]. This [illegible] is the Bastille of the deputies. It consists of a small room furnished with chairs and beds. There is imprisoned and rigorously confined the over-gushing deputy, who, as happened to the [illegible] M. Baudry d'Asson, an ardent royalist, is adjudged by the president to be deadly intractable.

In addition to these interrupters, who are more mechanical [illegible] in the box, or bawlers, or scolds, or monomaniacs, there are interrupters shrewd and well posted, who bring out a striking [illegible] [illegible] telling bit of pleasantry, so as to expose the sophistry of the orator or lessen the effect of his calumnies.

But who are these orators? What is their audience of the galleries and of the tribunes? What the chief personalities that people the chamber? How are the parties divided, and what sketches can [illegible] of the chiefs who lead them. These questions I will answer in my next letter.

THE CHICAGO.

A Cruiser That Has Fulfilled the Conditions on Which It Was Built.

When it was decided to reconstruct the United States navy some years ago, John Roach, of Chester, Pa., was given a contract to build four steel vessels. The last of these, the Chicago, made her trial trip in [illegible].

The Chicago was without [illegible] and guns, but was weighted to bring her down to the [illegible] draft when [illegible] are furnished. The trial trip was made under the command of Capt. H. B. Robeson, on Long Island sound, a run of six hours at full speed. Starting at [illegible] she steamed eastward for three and a half hours, then westward for two and a half hours, the tide being adverse both ways, returning to the Brooklyn navy yard.

The Chicago is a twin screw vessel. Her length is 334 1-6 feet over all; depth, 34 2-3 feet from garboard streak to under side of [illegible] deck; extreme breadth, 48 1-3 feet; [illegible] draught at load line, 19 feet; displacement, 4,500 tons; indicated horse power, 5,000. She is divided into ten water-tight compartments, four of which [illegible] are occupied by boilers and engines, with a double bottom [illegible]. Her [illegible] consists of two compound overhead beam engines, which has led to some [illegible] criticism by English authorities in naval architecture, it being claimed that such machines are obsolete. The [illegible] are also regarded too heavy for the amount of power developed, and the boilers are considered faulty. The cruiser will be bark rigged. The trip was quite successful, the power developed being quite up to the requirements of the contract. She will, however, take [illegible] water, as she [illegible] on the trial trip.

THE CHICAGO.
AS SHE WILL APPEAR WHEN FULLY RIGGED.

The Chicago's battery will consist of four eight inch high power breech loading rifles, two on each side, mounted in projecting half turrets on the flush spar deck; eight six inch rifles on the gun deck; two five inch in [illegible] [illegible] abaft the captain's cabin. The secondary battery [illegible] of Hotchkiss [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], the magazines [illegible].

Jumped the Track.

WICHITA, Kan., January 16.—Two sleepers and a chair car of a train on the Chicago, Kansas & Nebraska road jumped the track near here this morning and were thrown down a small bank. All the passengers were more or less jostled, but none seriously injured except William Callahan, who lost an arm. A broken rail caused the disaster.
